The sun's rising on a new day,

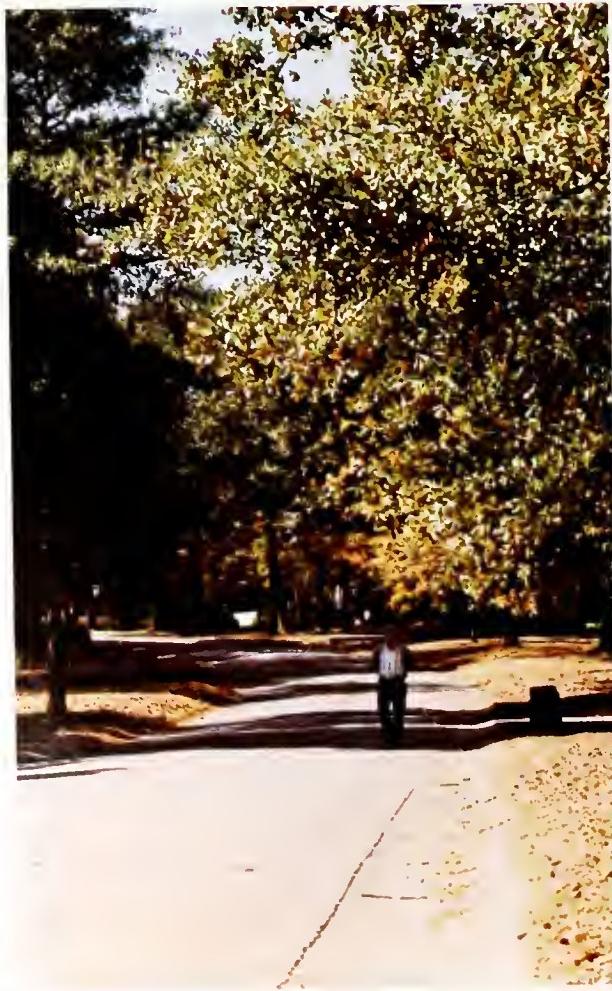

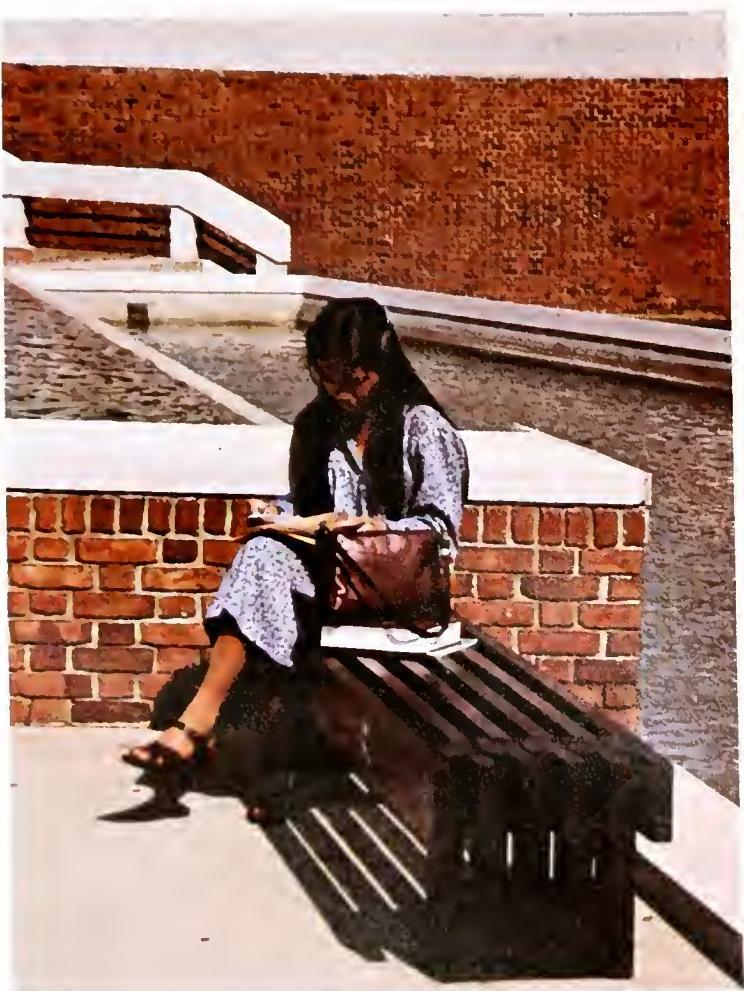

Light reflecting off a piece of broken glass.

A reminder of the reasons seasons speed past with our minds trailing last,

And to end the song the circle must be complete

The sun's shining.

the breeze moving,

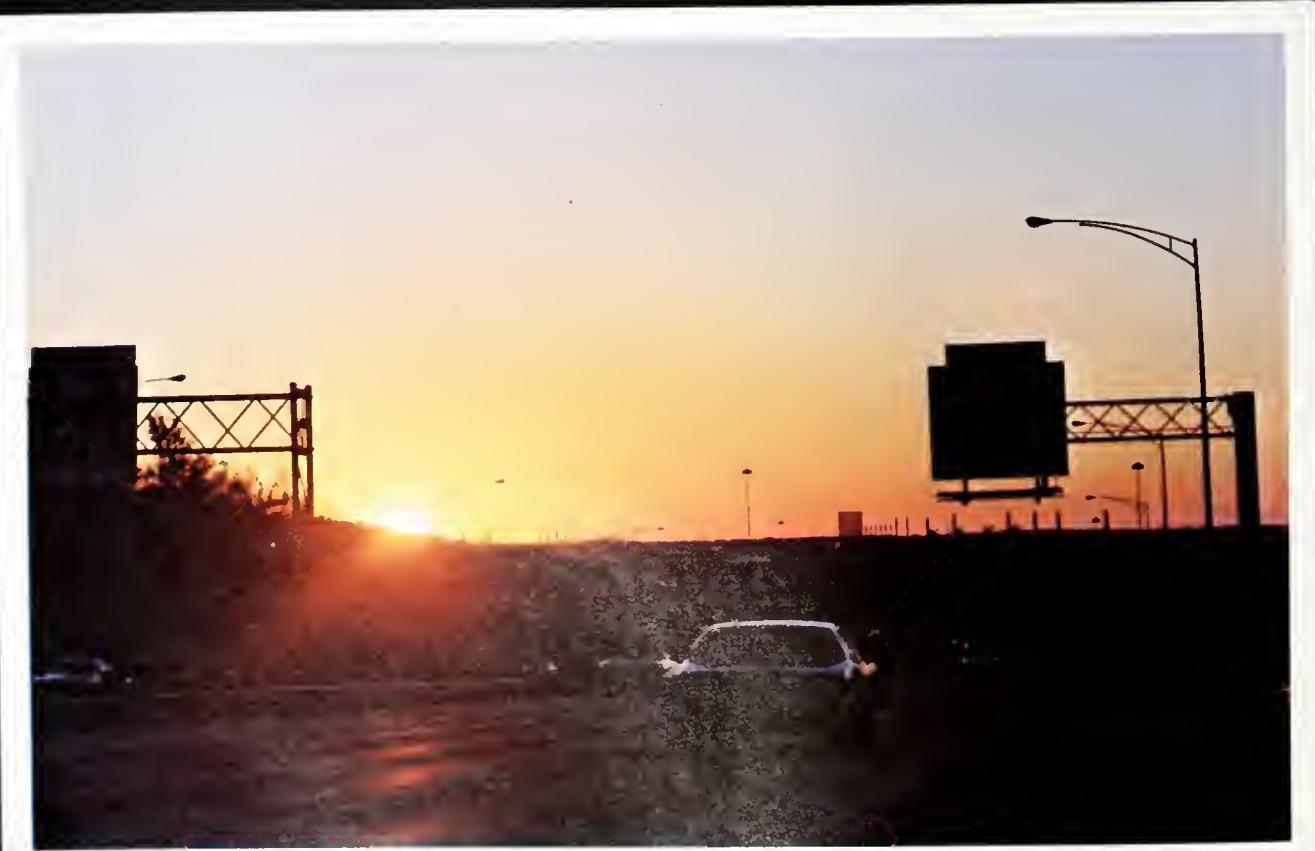

the winds of change

that shape our minds come at last

In its glowing the sky's showing

That the colors are only light refracted past

And to end the song

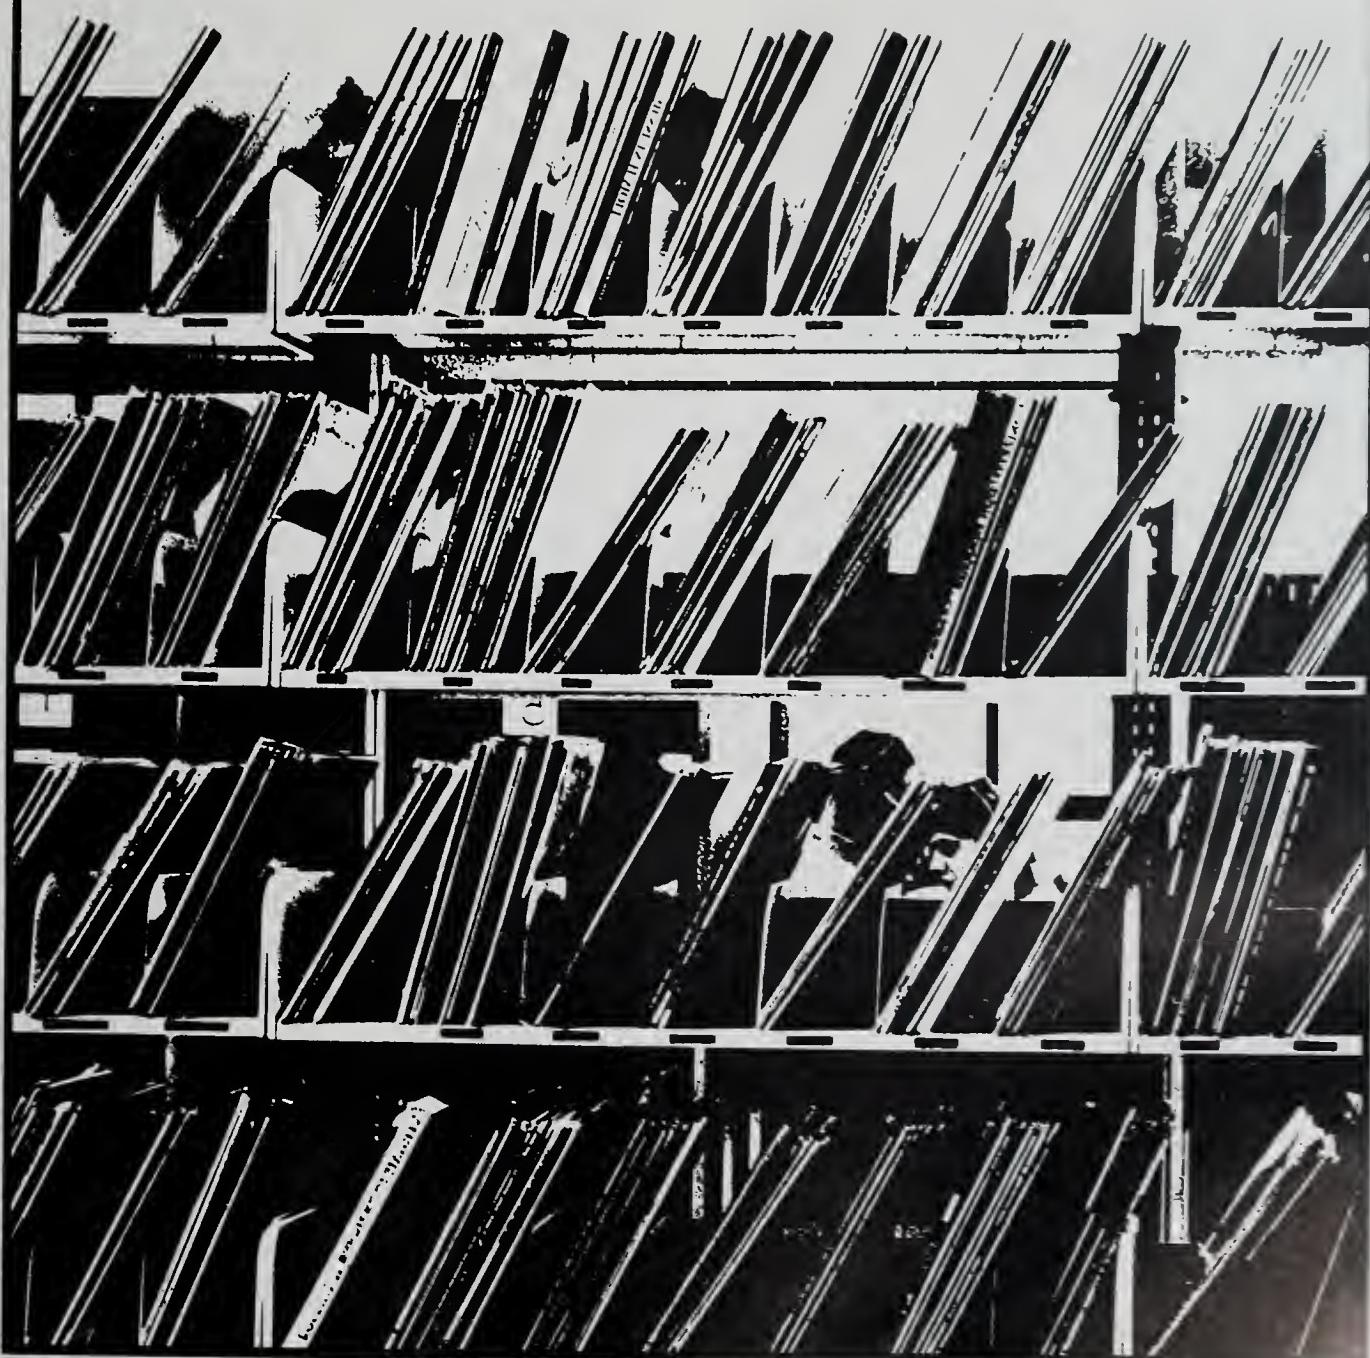

the circle must be complete.

FEATURES

Well anyway, my roommate just developed my pictures for me, and I thought that I would show you a little of what life on the other side of town is like. Well, like everywhere else, you will find people. some nice and some not so nice. And Mom, I have met so many people, so many CUTE people ....

Oh Mama! The social life here at B-S College is so...so peachy keen, to say the least. First of all, there were those wonderful fraternity and sorority parties, and parties, and more parties!

And of course, being a natural-born dancer, I had to learn how to do the splits.

It's not like I'm a professional dancer or anything.

I just have a really good sense of rhythm and the ability to move my body in a way that's kind of unique and special to me.

So I guess you could say I'm a natural-born dancer.

But I'm not a professional dancer or anything.

I just have a really good sense of rhythm and

the ability to move my body in a way that's

kind of unique and special to me.

So I guess you could say I'm a natural-born dancer.

But I'm not a professional dancer or anything.

I just have a really good sense of rhythm and

And back in November there were those Intro Plays, a selection of plays written by real students! Can you believe it? There was even a Model Senate held on this very campus. I went out with one of the more mature, you understand, High School guys: I just had to see if there were any future George Wallaces in the group. And would you believe it, I didn't even see one! But all was not lost; I did find a Jimmy .... And Convocations, Mother and what Convocations. There were things from "How to Be A Good Alabamian-B-S Style" to the Crisis Center Pregnancy Lectures. Well Mother, like you always said, I got involved. I attended everything for the cultural benefits, you understand . . . well, everything but the Pregnancy Lectures. Why, what would decent people think?

Well, I guess you saw the QII on my bill—well, that's an abbreviation for Quest II, Q*U*E*S*T II, not for que . . . , oh well! Oh mother, tell daddy that I'll spend his money only for necessary things, and is Quest II ever necessary. There are always films, Films, FILMS . . . ! I will even bet that you and daddy have seen some of the older ones. But mother, who in the hell was Spencer Tracy?

ADAM'S RIB

Starring · Spencer Tracy · Katharine Hepburn
Judy Holliday · Tom Ewell
Written by Ruth Gordon · Garson Kanin

Released by M-G-M
Directed by George Cukor
Produced by Lawrence Weingarten

"Here again is the famous battle of the sexes, strictly without benefit of August Strindberg and waged in the home and courtroom shared by Adam Bonner (Tracy) and his wife Amanda (Hepburn). Although both are lawyers and given to calling each other Pinky in their kittenish moments, there is no confusing their respective pronouncements on a woman's right to take a few compulsive potshots at a philandering husband . . . A frequently funny harlequinade."

— Newsweek

"In such comedies as Pat and Mike and Adam's Rib, Katharine Hepburn and Spencer Tracy incarnate a perfect American couple; he, ruggedly classless and cynical, but responsive to her idealism, each the other's ideal foil. And, in Cukor's hands particularly, Judy Holliday becomes a fascinating counterpoint to Katharine Hepburn."

— Raymond Durgnet, The Crazy Mirror

CHILDREN OF PARADISE
(LES ENFANTS DU PARADIS)

Director: Marcel Carné

In the 1950s it seemed wonderful, a complex, strange and with a most liberating poetical ambiguity. Children of Paradise was the indispensable Foreign Film. After a quarter century or so, a revisit to Children is cheerful and encouraging. The main characters are both clear and shimmering. They have their particular attributes as in any normal movie but they also contain the possibility of being their own opposites. Reality in this film is never a matter of nothing but. It is this that makes any mention of children so compelling.

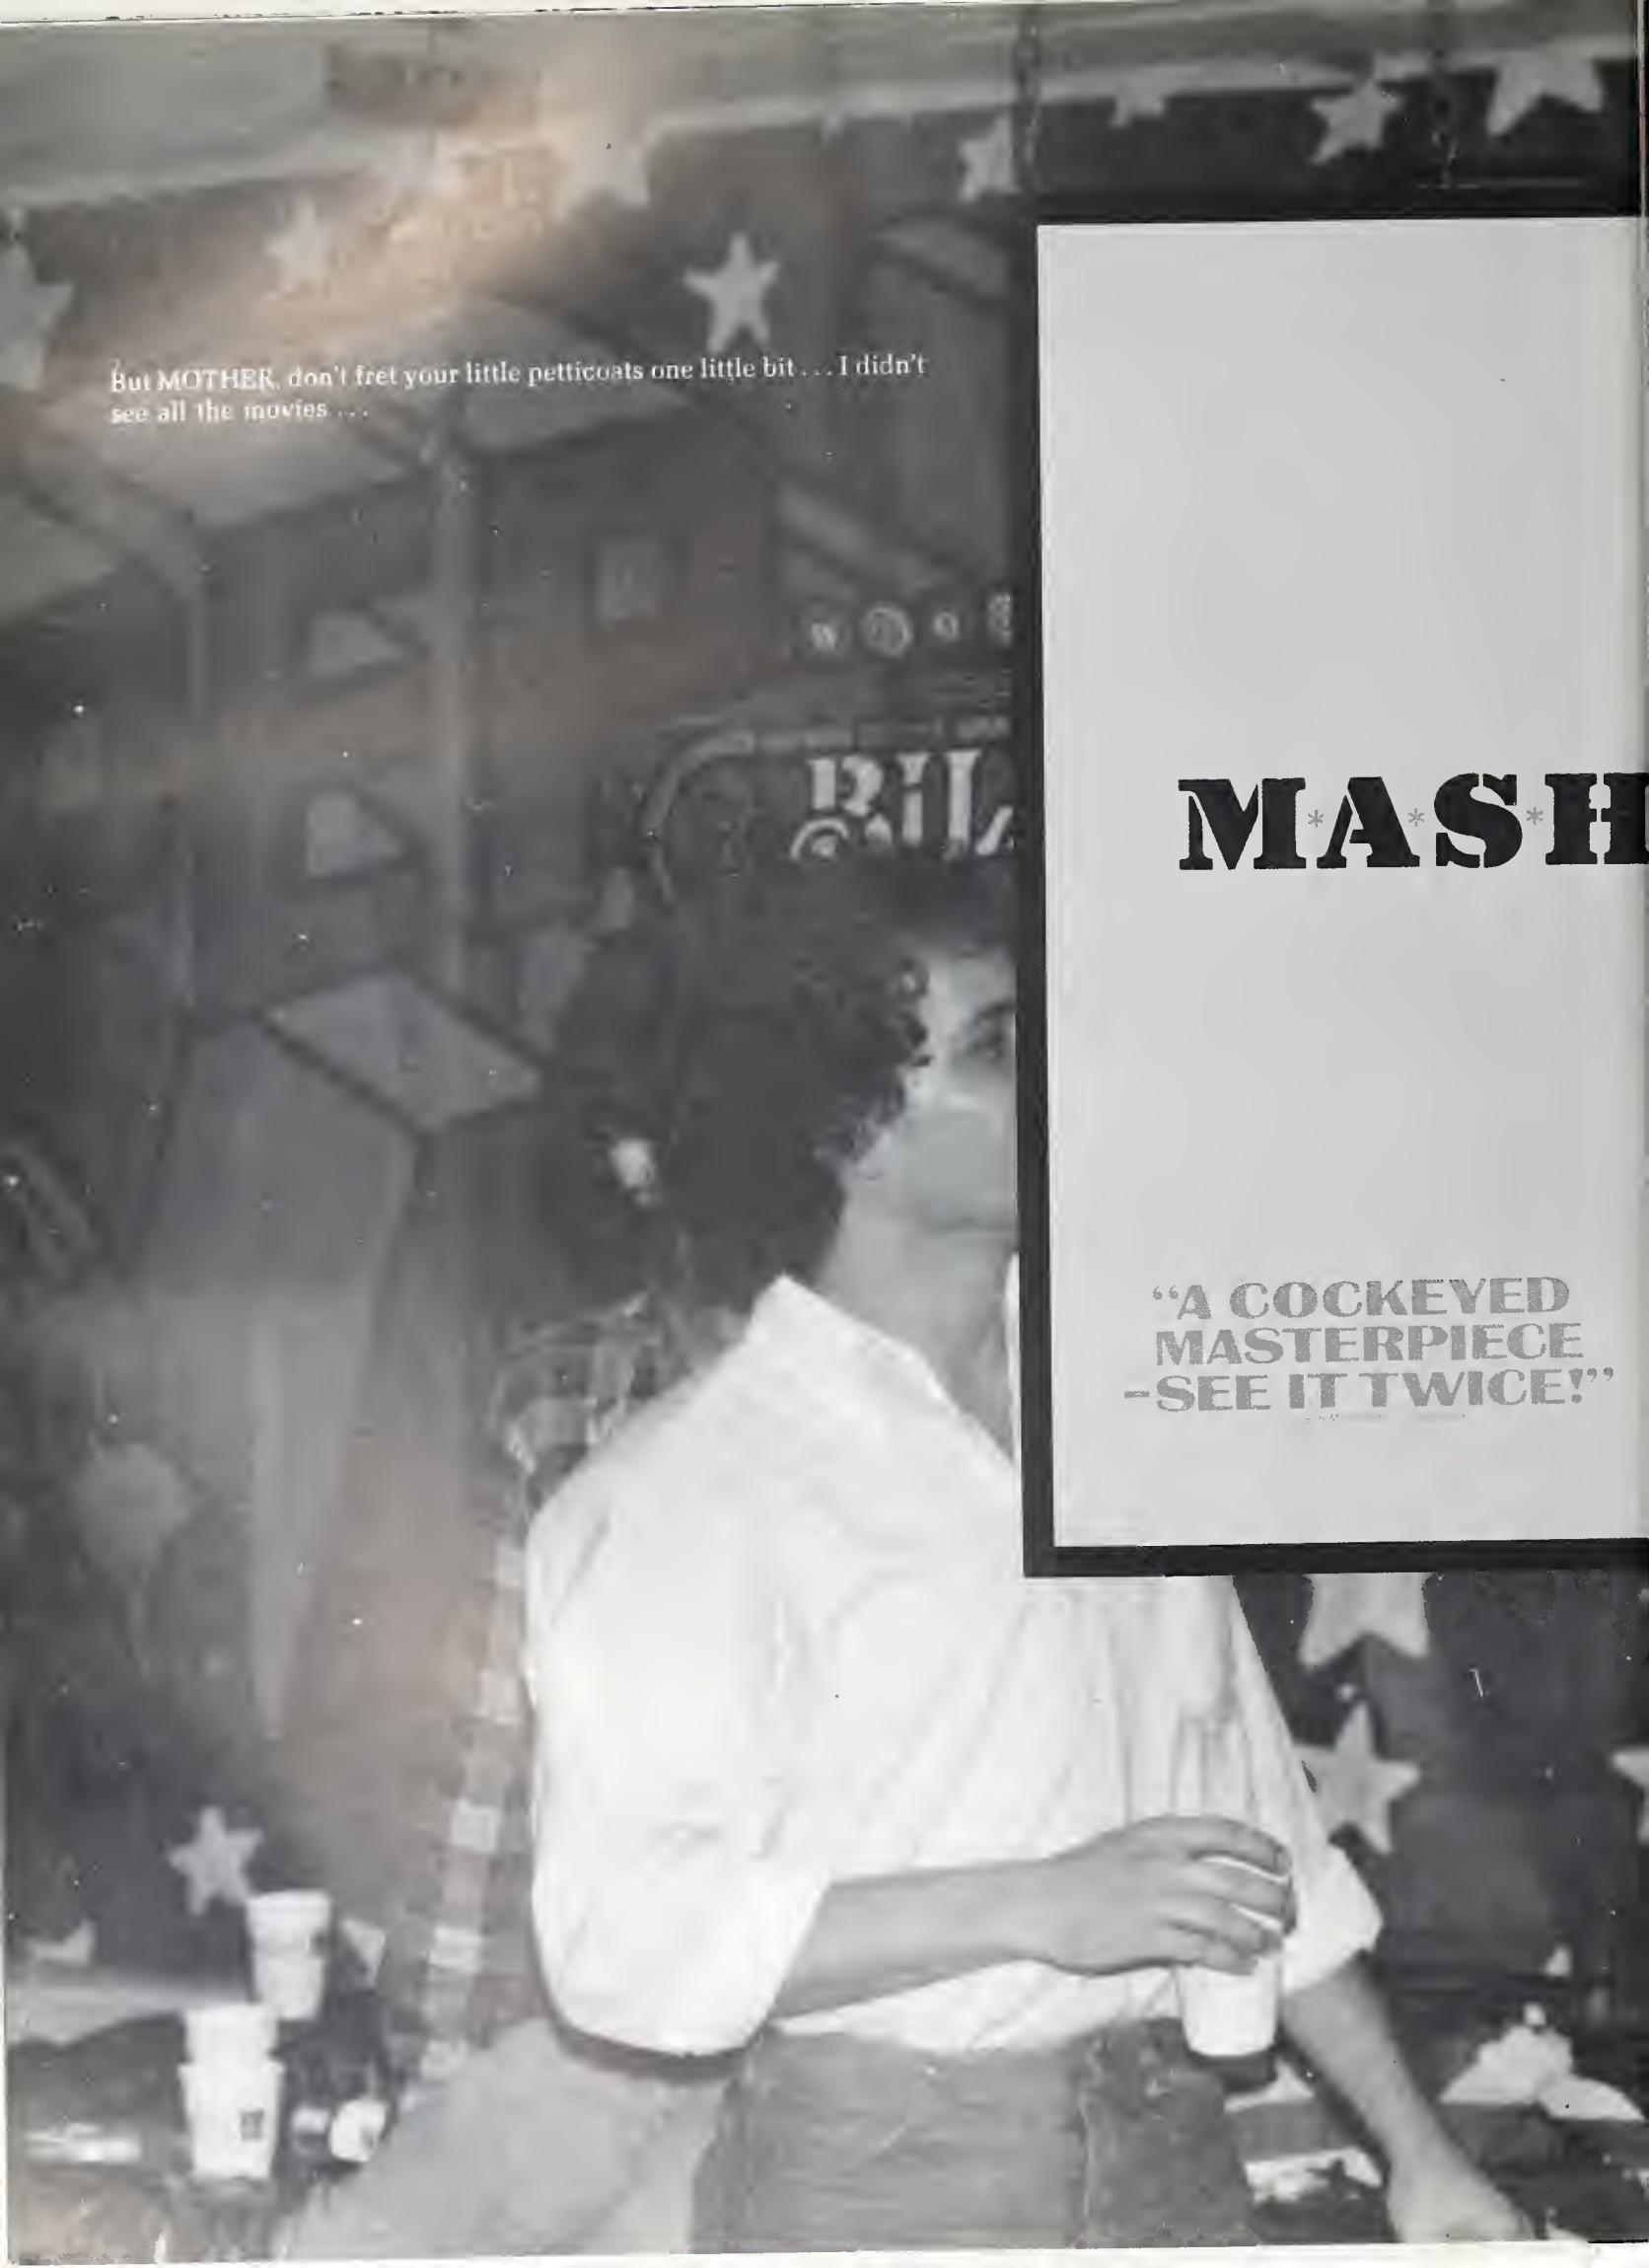

This is a big stagecoach of a movie that rumbles serviceably and credibly on a perfectly recognizable road. It is the passengers who are magic.

—Richard Elder
New York Times

The uncut version of Children of Paradise has been called "quite drolly" The Gone with the Wind of films. Anyone who can resist it "ambiguity" cannot deserve as never to see it.

Well, I'll be hermiting away soon for finals. I need all A's to keep my grades where they are. Tell me that I should pass this term.

It's a tough life, mother, a real tough life. If I weren't so stubborn, I'd quit this hassle, but I'm not a quitter ... am I? Oh, I guess I'll stick it out anyway, but I'm not a scholar. I would rather watch TV . . .

STUDENT LIFE

Dear Mom,

I finally unpacked. This whole week was filled with orientation and rush. My roommate is really interesting so far. We talked for the longest time after we checked into our room and decided to meet the others on our floor. I have a feeling everyone was a bit nervous. You would not believe all the people just on my hall. Quite a few of them are out of state and some of them are out of country. Back to orientation. This whole week was full of activities such as a Showcase, Dr. Berte's picnic, registration, and campus tours. The Showcase included presentations from the Theatre department, Dance department, Art department, and Music department. Freshmen and new students were assigned advisors and "groups" to meet with for the next month. I guess they were trying to get everyone acquainted and let our advisors know something about us at the same time. Getting my classes wasn't too bad. Everything was set up in Snavely Ballroom and members of the Triangle Club and volunteers helped pull cards. I bought my hooks. Definitely a harrowing experience.

Mom,

Rush was a blast! I don't know if I'll go Greek but my roommate and I are meeting practically the entire campus not to mention the rest of our class. There are five sororities and four fraternities on campus. So far we're just going from house to house and smiling a great deal. Each night you're supposed to narrow down your choice until you've either been partied out or decide to go Greek. Then there is a ritual of picking up a bid, pledging, taking pledge tests, and a few vague and guarded traditions are attached as well. There are independents on campus but it seems everything revolves around Greek events.

Mom,

Life is rough. I ran out of quarters and the change machine died. I thought maybe you would like to know about mundane things such as meals, classes, friends, and grades. The meals here really aren't all that bad. The people working the line are really interesting as well. (Halloween brought all sorts of surprises from them.) There are two meal plans here. One is for fourteen meals a week and the other is for twenty-one meals a week. I bought a fourteen-meal plan but I am finding it hard to eat all of those with all the other stuff I find myself doing. My classes are "challenging" but also entertaining at times. All the professors I have are not only excited about their subjects but also about their students and are usually understanding when it comes to their problems and small discoveries. I know the professors have taught the same material before, but it is hard to tell when they seem so interested in the classes. Now to grades. So much for that subject. I don't know. Maybe you will get a copy of midterm grades before I do. Think about it this way. College is not just for learning material in books and labs: college is a people experience.

Dear Mom,

What talent! I am enclosing a program from Orpheus. Some of my friends were in it, and they really put together a show. About four departments cooperated in staging the production. I was really impressed. Judy was a scream. I've noticed something else. These people are talented. I go to class with them, eat lunch with them, and talk to them in the elevators, but I didn't realize the amount of creativity and skill they have. They were other productions on campus than Orpheus. The underground theatre put on several one-acts such as Crawling Arnold, Cop Out, and The Bald Suprano. In addition to the one-acts the theatre also put on four one-acts written and directed by students, in the Introduction to Theatre class. The Theatre department looks promising.

Mom,

Christmas vacation is approaching and everyone I know has the crazies, a disease contracted during the exam season. We put a tree up with lights and everything. During the latter part of dead week (ha, ha) we had a Christmas party and exchanged gifts. Someone in desperation hung mistletoe—everywhere. Next week exams start. My last exam is on Friday so I guess I'll be coming home Saturday. Let's see. The Carol Service was a big smash. I have an extra lab on Saturday. Greeks are having all sorts of parties. It seems like everyone is having a candle lighting around here. There is really not much to write about. People are going ice skating, going to the Tide, going to the Outlet, going to the library, and primarily going insane over exams.

Dear Mom,

Thought I'd drop a note before my 9:15. Interim is going so quickly. I registered for my Spring courses. What a race! Bought my books and supplies. My roomy is on choir tour and everyone is taking it easy. I have a feeling it's going to catch up with me this next semester. The people that went to Europe and Mexico are back already. There were all sorts of courses to take on campus. Some people chose to work in their home towns or observe something somewhere. I think there might be a new fraternity and a new sorority for next year. Some friends of mine went to the Boston concert. I don't know. I guess I should stick in some pithy insight but I don't have too many any more. All the things I was absolutely sure of at the beginning of the year have faded and through the great college experience I have learned that I don't know of any certainties. I don't even believe I've even scratched the surface of what is to come.

P.S.—Send money.

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

My feets is tired

by Mike Harper

Howell Raines' book title, My Soul Is Rested, is taken from a snippet of conversation with an old, tired, civil rights marcher. Someone asked the woman how she could go on because of the bone weariness of the march. Her remark was "My feets is tired, but my soul is rested!"

Mr. Raines brought credit to our city and campus this past Monday as he addressed a convocation on the subject of Birmingham's recent history as regards the civil rights movement. His was an articulate and sobering account of our recent past and the hopeful comments of his final words to us are indeed an indication of the possibilities that are before us.

They are, however, only possibilities at this point. The struggle for racial justice and equality of relationship continues. While our city and campus have accomplished a great deal in recent years, we all are aware of shortcomings in our dealings with each other.

It could be that, for many of us, tired feet is more of an appropriate reference than is rested souls.

Mr. Raines spoke of the courageous speaking out of a few within our community and campus over a decade ago. He also reminded us of the uninvolved silence of most of us. He seemed to indicate that our actions spoke different words than our beliefs suggested.

For hundreds of years now the Church has been known, at its best, as a community of belief and action. A gathering for worship, prayer and instruction was simply a prelude to a scattering for service in the world.

Our worship on Sunday morning in Yeilding Chapel will seek to address the theme of the Church as a community of belief and action. Beginning this Sunday, October 15, we will have hot coffee and doughnuts available beginning at 9:30 a.m. for those who would like to have a simple breakfast prior to our time of worship.

We begin at 10:00 a.m. We will try to address the paradox of tired feet and rested souls. Hope to see you there!

Foreign Languages Discovery Week. Will you take a few minutes to think about why our government has chosen to emphasize this area of learning?

It is said that the best advertisement for a product is a satisfied customer. Certainly I am an enthusiastic user and am convinced of the values of studying foreign languages. I can assure you that many of my most stimulating and rewarding experiences in life have resulted from my knowledge of other languages and from the cultural and social contacts growing out of that interest. However, it is not necessary to specialize in language study in order to receive benefits.

From their remotest beginnings, universities of the western world considered a knowledge of a second language as basic in a search for further knowledge. It was the most direct way to broadening points of view, to deepening recognition of a single culture's limitations. Today, language study continues to be one of the greatest liberalizing experiences in the American plan of education, for it breaks down barriers of a single speech and of a single culture and offers us the impact of other value judgments, other psychologies, other forms of beauty.

Too many persons assume the attitude of my three-year-old daughter who rebelled against my telling her the name of objects in Spanish. "Tell me the truth of it!" she would insist—and the "truth" for her was English. This attitude of rigidity and smugness is found in many adults who have missed the varied experiences of foreign language study. That which a person gains from trying to penetrate and to understand another culture and its "truth" is, to me, a paramount reward of study, whether one ever achieves a high degree of "skill" or ever uses his language study in a "practical" way.

It is certain that even a limited study of other languages gives the student a new perspective on his native tongue and on its flaws and virtues. Likewise, an expanding

Buchanan to speak at

Congressman John Buchanan, who has represented the Sixth Congressional District in Washington, D.C. since the mid-sixties, will be the speaker at the Birmingham-Southern/McCoy United Methodist Church Community Forum on Sunday evening, October 15, beginning at 6:00 p.m.

The format for the evening involved approximately 30 minutes of input from Mr. Buchanan, a break for light refreshments, and a 30-45 minute question and answer period.

Mr. Buchanan has already fought a tough race to defeat Mr. Albert Lee Smith

Last winter, under the direction of Dr. Jim Koger and Mr. Michael Walker, a soccer team was born at BSC. In its first season with the Alabama Soccer League, the team compiled a record of 2 wins, 3 losses, and 1 tie. But that bare record does not reveal what 'Southern's first soccer season proved: that BSC could field a respectably competitive team, even with mostly inexperienced players who were learning the game. In a letter to potential new players, Dr. Jim Koger said, "The enthusiasm established with this first effort and the recognized potential of our returning players makes us confident that we can look forward to a better season record and much better soccer this year."

Indications of the support for soccer at BSC can be seen in that a line-item budget for the sport has been established for the 1978-79 season, projecting a 20 game season for fall and spring combined. Also, in the hope of establishing soccer as a fall sport at Southern, a field has been readied for the fall season on campus and regulation goals have been purchased.

Although the team is still organized on a club basis, varsity intercollegiate soccer must be paired with an additional women's sport because of TITLE IX regulations—the entry into official NAIA competition is virtually assured if the program continues to grow and gain the support of the whole college community....

Bending Probability

And
the light of dawn
images which dance before him
Even as it begins...

Even as I lose

But ...
When the score is read out loud
And smiles are seen in the faces of the crowd
VICTORY seems not to matter ...

For such scenes are only sadder
Silent views.

Anyway ...
The points I would achieve,
The recognition I would receive,
And the pain I would relieve ...

Would be a silly place to no end.

The game that I have played,
The points that I have made,
And the plans that I have laid
Are but beyond me to points around the bend . . .

In winning all, one loses all,
And in losing,
Deeper games and sharper strategies are revealed.

The word is devoted! These girls keep on their toes all year by selling Christmas Seals for the Crippled Childrens Hospital in Richmond, and maintaining a very high academic standard. But, boy do they have fun too! The annual Steak Fry joins pledges with actives and brings together all kinds of Greek folks. The Mother-Daughter banquet is always a big success. That's KD—successful, beautiful, and most prestigious.

This active bunch of men take the greek life and live it to the fullest. Hosting a party for the new pledges sets the men off for a great year as they "Get High for the Fly" and hold dynamite winter and spring House Parties. The fun and excitement continues through spring as they put on the annual Red and White Formal. The Theta Chi's keep up their spirit through all endeavors (which has been proven by their winnings in the Greek Games the past seven years!) Action, excitement, fun, ..... Theta Chi

Just when you need them they're at your service. Constantly aiding everyone in various ways such as singing Christmas carols at the Children's Hospital and getting ready for their February Formal, taking off to Gatlinburg, and just plain having a good time is all part of the Pi Phi year. On the move—that's our gals.

Shortly after the long hours of rush have been completed, fraternity houses cleaned, sorority rooms back in order—it begins. The screams, shouts, clapping, and crying to overjoyed actives and pledges indeed adds a picturesque moment to bid pickup at BSC. From the ripping open of envelopes by sorority pledges to the cheers of the fraternities, the steps of the fountain on bid day seems just like yesterday to every Greek on campus.

Individuality—a tradition by which the Greek system at Birmingham—Southern has based its goals. The many types of personalities can be found lying somewhere within Greek life. From the long hours of rush to the crazy minutes of Greek Week members of the Greek life can find happiness and purpose. Keeping busy with intramural sports, lyrics in the Greek Sing, Mixers, and studying together, Greeks aid each other in the academic and social aspects of their college life.

Competition between the fraternities and the sororities exists; but just enough to insure the level of friendship to those men and women who so actively and vivaciously make the BSC campus a more interesting place to live.

The SOUTHERN ACCENT would like to thank Cal Wiggins and Sonya Henderson for the professional-quality photos found in this book.

The staff of the 1979 Southern Accent would like at this time to present to the student body their yearbook. From the very moment that we started working, everything fell into place—pictures were being made, classes were going smoothly (as smoothly as could be expected!), and above all, people were not complaining. do a better job? Seriously, from the very moment that we started working, everything fell into place—pictures were being made, classes were going smoothly (as smoothly as could be expected!), and above all, people were not complaining.

We would like, moreover, to show our appreciation to the following people for their hard work and dedication that either directly or indirectly went into this book . . . Ron Burton, for his extra help with photographs; Dudley, Bob, and George, for maintaining sanity even in the face of impossible odds; Dr. Susan Hagen, for reminding everyone that things must get better—they simply had to; Mr. Edwin Terrell, for all his off-campus work with public relations with the local media; Claire and Kathy, for keeping spirit at a peak throughout the entire year; Warren Feist, for the exclusive use of his poetry in this book; Mr. and Mrs. Walter G. Wren, for the use of their home and vehicles used within and for unending patience; and Mr. Wesley Walker, for starting our staff out correctly. We would also like to thank all of our advertisers and patrons for contributions without which this book would have possibly been delivered in 1980!

We, the staff of the Southern Accent, hope that you, the student body, will find this yearbook both entertaining and informative. With warmest regards, we are . . .

Sincerely yours,
The staff of the 1979

Greatness

An Allegorical
Tale Of Man
And Nature

A man we shall call Great meandered forth one dark day . . . playing a tune on a reed pipe. Over his head, and all else, were clouds—clouds that concealed the Sun, its warmth, and its light, from him. He tried to reconcile himself by saying, "Who can tame the wind or turn the clouds at his request?"

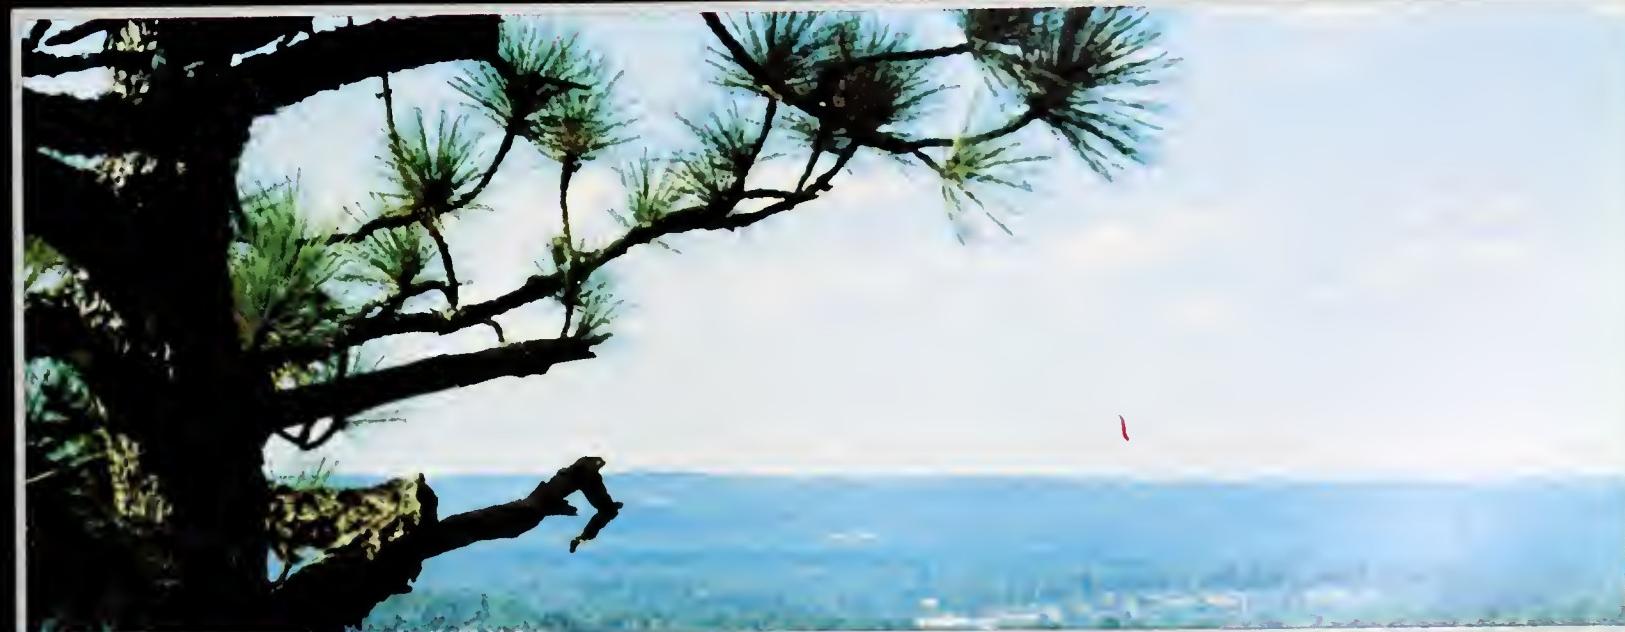

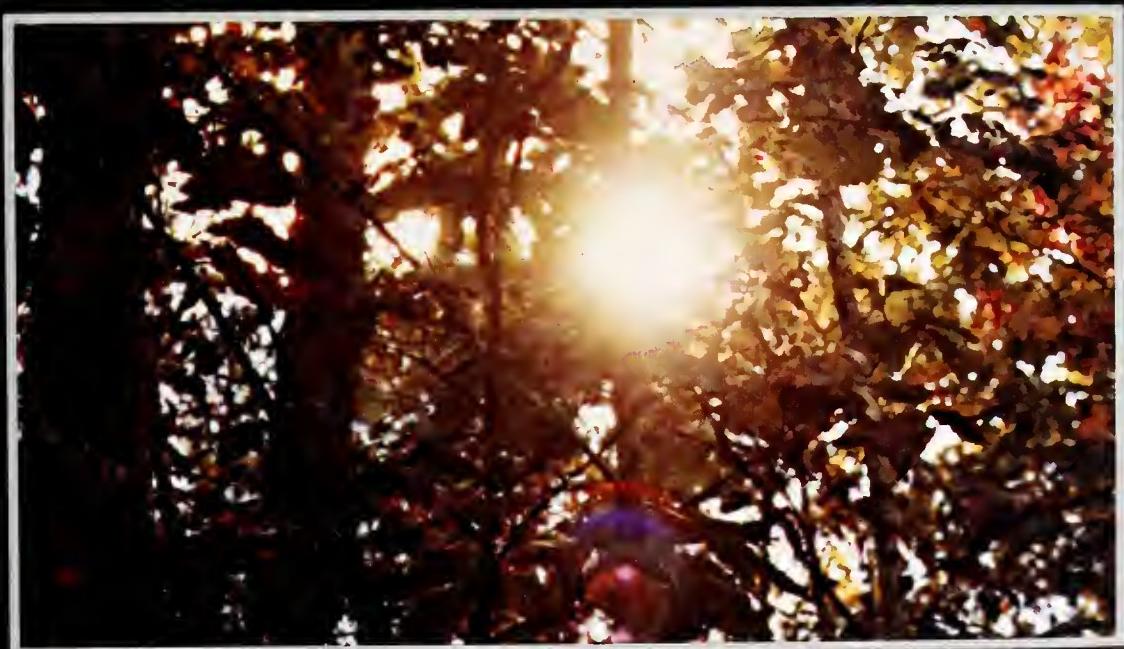

For the moment, the clouds parted, allowing a beam to strike the ground below. He understood now that such things should not be permitted to deny the light of the source from all men. Being so decided, he set off on a journey to reach above the clouds and to attain a position from which they could not cast a dark shadow over him.

As he walked on, the earth cried after him. Calling him by name, the earth clutched with fingers of verdant jurisdiction. Holding fast to his pipe, he ran thusly pursued and harried on all sides. That which he thought his friends now followed close behind, and he fled before it.

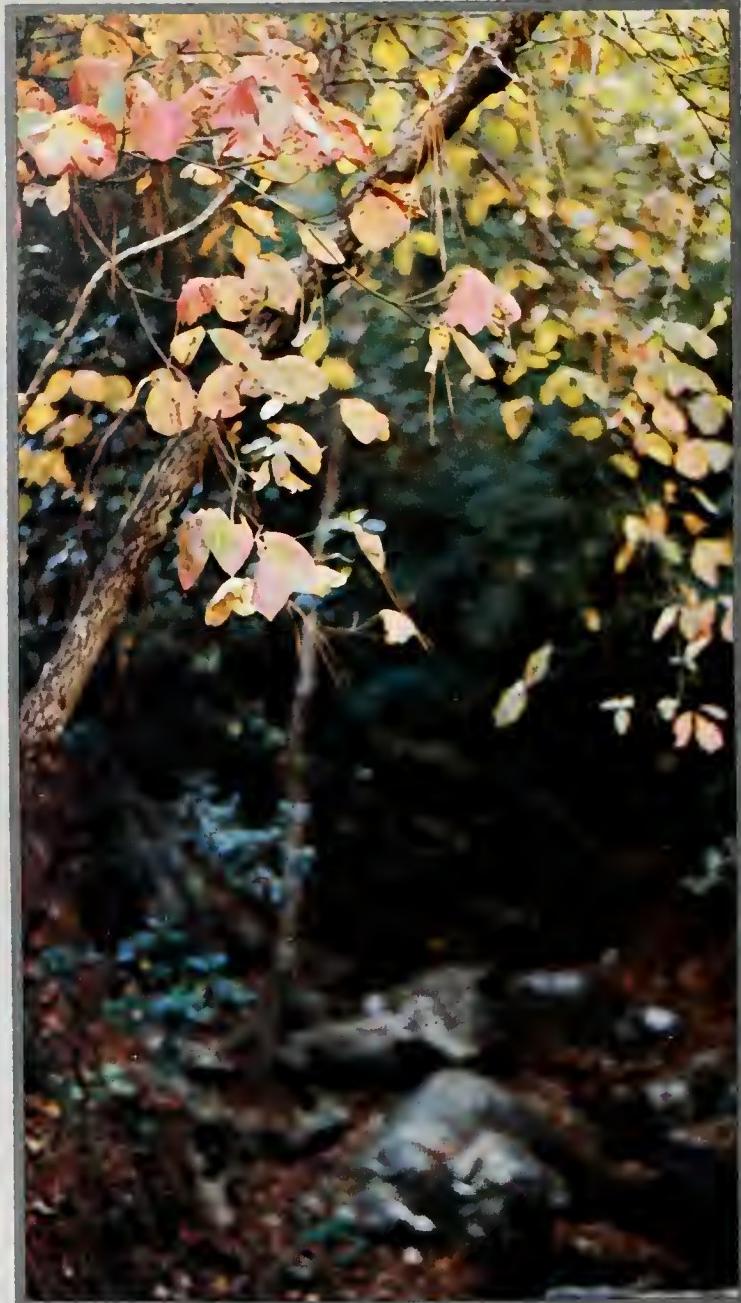

Now and then as he broke into the clearings, they would lose pace behind him. By way of clinging, he escaped them; they were finally too far behind to ever catch up. Then through the trees, he saw the Transcendent Mountains that climbed the sky to the sun. This mighty rock could convey him to the Sun's doorstep.

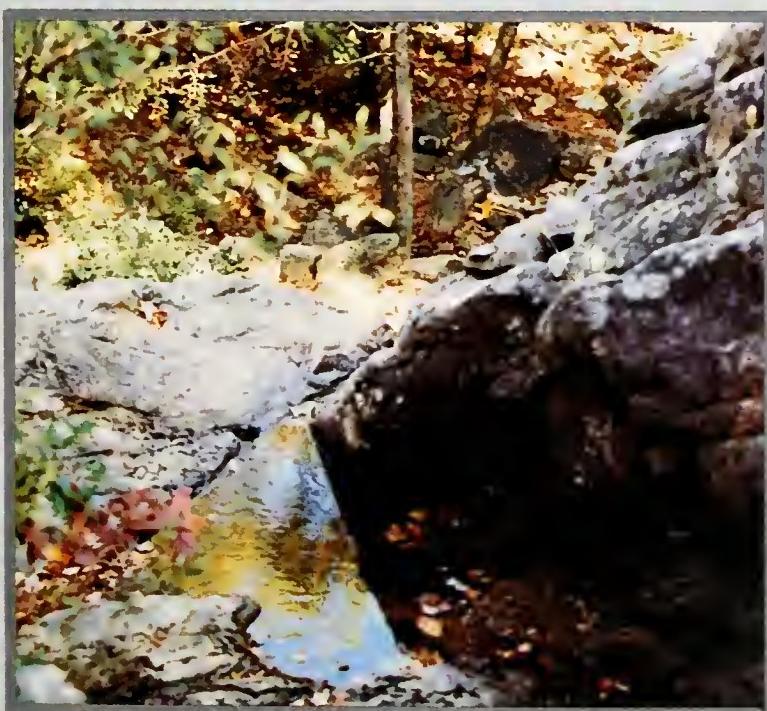

He started to climb the mighty mound of rock and earth. He found it, however, less easy than he had thought. From a distance, he could not see the many caverns, pitfalls, and general obstructions. He then realized that in order to ascend to the Sun he would have to forego his beloved reed pipe. At once he relinquished it and set off.

He gazed transfixed at the junction of the mountain and the sky. He soon found that the mountain had the solution to the problems of ascendancy. An overhang of rock, for instance, allowed him to pass by the vicious holes. He also found that by climbing close to the rock, while on the precarious pathways, he could remain true to his course.

Now, each problem overcome, he approached the summit of the tallest mountain, but he looked neither left, right, nor behind, keeping his eyes on his destination. As he climbed, he thought of the paradox of the mountain being its own solution.

After climbing through the seal of clouds, he made his way to the top. As he broke through the last remaining vestiges of cloud, the light shone full upon him, and he was pleased. Below him were the clouds that had so soon before held the dark cudgeon o'er his head. Now he was the master of the clouds. Surveying all around him from the summit, his heart grew tranquil, and a great peace eased his mind as if a great load had been lifted from his trembling brow. Turning to the right, he saw a sight that made his heart leap, a golden flute.

As he drew the golden flute to his lips and put wind into it, such liquid melodies flowed forth as he had never heard before. The notes swelled, and they seemed to echo over the valley below; they dispersed the clouds and allowed the sunlight to pour over the whole of the valley and its inhabitants. Then he glimpsed a little of his grand duty, a maker of music, a cheerer of hearts, and a clearer of clouds of dark despondence. As his life progressed, his music made more sons of man aware of the Sun and its beauty. He truly brought sunshine to all those below . . .

The ALLEGORY, however, can never have an end.
